With the DocuScan system, capturing patient information couldn't be easier.

Pen and Paper - EMR

The growing pressure on medical practices to adopt Electronic Medical Record (EMR) systems presents health care professionals with the need for a quick, effective method of capturing patient information. With most EMR programs available today, the patient fills out a form by hand — and medical personnel then must key the data into their EMR system. Other EMR programs ask patients to provide historical data using a computer — an approach that can create resistance with technology-averse patients.

Now, DocuScan's new digital pen and paper system enables you to automatically capture patient history data, using leading edge technology that is virtually transparent to the patient.

Simple as 1, 2, 3!

1. Just ask the patient to fill out the history form in the waiting room, using the digital pen.
2. PAROS Technology captures the handwritten information by reading the specially printed paper.
3. When the patient has completed the form, you simply slide the pen into a dock at your computer. Information will be transferred to your EMR system.
